Archaeological Society of British Columbia - Aims and Ethics of the Society

In joining the Archaeological Society of British Columbia, a person agrees to uphold the following aims and ethics:

- to encourage the identification, recording and protection of archaeological materials and any established or likely archaeological site in British Columbia,
- to discourage the sale of, or the placing of a commercial value on any artifact,
- to abide by the heritage legislation of British Columbia. This legislation states that archaeological survey and excavations may be taken only under permit and that a report on all findings must be filed with the Minister in charge. In addition a member agrees to make any surface finds in his or her possession available for inspection and study by professional archaeologists and First Nations.
